Letters, Camden Herald

Fox Hill = unexploded bomb

Anyone with half a brain or more must know that putting a drug clinic in the middle of Camden is like putting an unexploded bomb in the middle of the Camden-Rockport High School gym. It's messy.

But the Camden Board thinks it's a good idea. They are frantically having lawyers look for a way to tweak the zoning laws so that this latest bunch of opportunists can plunk their sorry selves and their sick, addicted clients right down in the center of our beautiful, peaceful little community.

Meanwhile, back at the funny farm, the "Shrink Brigade" has already purchased the Fox Hill property. The first time they submitted their proposal, there was a zoning issue. They pulled their plans and it appeared that they had left the area. Then, seemingly out of nowhere, they were back and bought the place.

What changed? Who would buy a place like that with the huge financial risk of not being able to open because of present town approved injunctions against such an operation? Would you? How do they know that the town board can change the rules?

There's something rotten in Camden, and it ain't the fish.

Sincerely,

Lynette Meiler
